Defining Problem Statements in the Ideation Phase

The ideation phase is all about generating a wide range of creative ideas to address specific challenges. However, before you can brainstorm effective solutions, you must clearly define the problem you're trying to solve. A well-articulated problem statement acts as a compass, guiding your ideation efforts and ensuring that the solutions you develop are relevant and impactful. Without it, you risk creating solutions for non-existent problems or missing the root cause entirely.

Student Services and Support Fragmentation

Customer (User) Problem Statement	Core Challenge	ServiceNow Solution
"Students are frustrated and often miss deadlines because they don't know who to contact or where to find accurate information when they have an issue that crosses multiple departments (e.g., financial aid, registration, housing, and IT)."	The institution lacks a single, unified point of contact (a "front door") for all student support services, leading to confusion, dropped cases, and inefficiency.	ServiceNow Customer Service Management (CSM) / Employee Centre Pro. Implement a centralized Student Service Portal (or Employee Centre) that acts as the single entry point for all inquiries. Use Service Catalog items to guide students to the correct department automatically, and use Case Management to track their issue across departments without the student having to re-explain their problem. Implement a Virtual Agent for instant, 24/7 answers to common questions, deflecting up to 30% of simple inquiries.

Faculty/Staff Administrative Burden

(HR, Finance, Grant Administration). For instance, an expense report can automatically route through a complex approval chain (Department Head → Finance → Dean) without human intervention. The Employee Centre provides a simple, self-service interface for all forms, eliminating the need for paper and email chains, leading to faster approvals and better compliance tracking.
